WHY SOME OF THEM ARE NOT PURE.

The absolute purity of the Royal Baking Powder is a fact not questioned by anyone, but the questions are frequently asked Why do not other manufacturers, also, put up pure baking powders, free from lime, alum, and other adulterants? Is it a fact that the Royal is the only pure and wholesome baking powder made?

There are three classes of these articles The cheap powders which are made of alum and are concededly poisonous, the phosphate powders containing from 8 to 12 per cent of lime, which is an ingredient of the phosphate used in them, and inseparable from it, and the cream of tartar powders.

The cream of tartar baking powders, to which class the Royal belongs, to be pure must be made from absolutely pure materials. The ordinary cream of tartar of the market contains lime. The Royal Baking Powder is made from cream of tartar specially refined and prepared for its use by patent processes by which the lime is totally eliminated. There is no other process by which cream of tartar can be freed from lime—made 100 per cent pure—in quantities practical for commercial purposes. Other baking powder makers, not being able to obtain these chemically pure goods (which are used exclusively in the Royal), are dependent upon the cream of tartar of the market, refined by the old fashioned methods by which it is impossible to remove the lime and other impurities.

These are the reasons why the Royal is absolutely pure while other baking powders contain lime or alum.

The absolute purity of the Royal Baking Powder not only renders it more perfectly wholesome, but its freedom from all extraneous substances makes it of higher leavening strength and effectiveness.

The schooner [illegible] arrived at Portland Wednesday morning. While coming down Delaware river the captain fell [illegible] and fell overboard. He was in the water [illegible] twenty minutes before the boat could be got to him. [illegible] his pocket wallet containing $100 dropped out of his pocket [illegible]

The brig [illegible] of Portland, arrived Wednesday from Perth Amboy with 590 tons of coal for Randall & McAllister. The brig left Norfolk Va, December last, with a cargo of coal for Sargent, Dennison & Co of Portland [illegible] an unusual amount of the hardships of the sea. She was dismasted in the gale of December 18 while en route to Portland and after running 1000 miles before the wind brought up at St Thomas where the cargo was sold. After being repaired the vessel set out for Cuba where a cargo of molasses was taken for New York. After this the present cargo of coal was taken on. The vessel's boats, storm sails and top masts were carried away during the December gale and at one time the vessel itself was leaking badly.

We hear says the Ellsworth American that a Mrs Cousins of Ellsworth, was discovered one day last week in the water below Bonsey's wharf with a stone tied to her neck. At first it was thought that life was extinct and the coroner was summoned but she revived before he reached the scene.

What came near being a serious accident occurred in the harbor at Green's Landing one moonlight evening not long ago. Five young men were in a row boat near Powder House Island and by some means—either carelessness or "skylarking"—upset their boat and all were left struggling in the water. Four immediately struck out for the shore but the fifth could not swim and might have been drowned but for the timely aid of Wood Webster, who, living on the island, happened to see them from his window and ran hatless in his stocking feet, to the shore and pushed off in a dory to the sinking man's assistance.

Mr A I Saunders, who for the past ten years has been landlord of the American House, in Ellsworth, will retire from the hotel business to pay more attention to his rapidly increasing real-estate business. He has sold the house to Mr Fred W Coburn, who for ten years has been the proprietor of the Michigan Exchange at Howard City, Mich. Mr Coburn is a Maine boy, having formerly lived in Lincoln, which place he left for the West. He is a good hotel man, very genial and agreeable, and will doubtless make a great success of the American House. He took possession on Monday last.

Johnson Boothby, one of the oldest engineers of the Maine Central railroad, died at his home in Waterville, Tuesday night. Mr. Boothby has for a few years been foreman of the round house there being the head engineer on the road. He died from paralysis of the brain, which was no doubt brought on by an injury to the eye, about two years ago.

The story got out, and the report was extant Wednesday morning, that the body of Charles Hume had been found. The rumor was helped out, however, by a report from Hallowell to the effect that two men while unloading a coal schooner at the wharf, Wednesday, saw the body of a man float past quite near them. They recognized it as the body of Charles Hume. Boats were put out, but before they could reach the body it sunk. Late Wednesday evening word was received by Marshal Morse, of Augusta, that he was wanted at Hallowell to identify a body found by some boys in the river, supposed to be that of Mr Hume.

Marine Engines

WHAT BATH KNOWS ABOUT THEM—AN INTERESTING TALK WITH SUPERINTENDENT HYDE

Bath Times.

The [illegible] persons who have viewed the two beautiful marine engines just completed at the New England Iron Works for the [illegible] Sagamore and Sapphire will probably be surprised to learn that four years ago such machines were unknown in this country. Yet this is the case. Triple expansion engines have only been built in the United States since 1884 and the first one of this pattern ever constructed in the western world was designed in Bath Me. Of our attempts had been made previous to this date to so combine cylinders as to make use of the great power which was known to be lost in the exhaust team and can [illegible] advance had been made.

About 1868 the Pacific Mail Steamship Company had two vessels built for their line and furnished with compound engines of Scotch manufacture, the earliest introduction of these engines to our shipping. John Roach the great iron shipbuilder made a careful examination of them, saw at once the advantages to be secured by their use and using them as model, proceeded to design other engines for the same company—the first compound engines ever built by Americans. Then different combinations of cylinders were tried by mechanics with various degrees of success, until at last a Scotchman set up a triple expansion engine. This was Alexander Kirk a man of rare mechanical genius. It was shortly after this that the steamer Meteor, a vessel designed for great speed, was built and an engine of exceptional power was demanded. The task of meeting this demand was assumed by Superintendent Hyde, of the New England Iron Works. There was little data at his disposal to assist in making the plans for such a machine. No works on anything beyond the single piston engine had ever been published and nothing like a correct account of Kirk's invention could be secured. But the thorough mastery which Mr Hyde had of the principles which underlie this branch of mechanics enabled him to handle the work. The report that such an engine was in process of construction, aroused a good deal of curiosity and no little ridicule. Wise men whose knowledge of steampower had been acquired in the fire room of a tug boat and other persons whose authority on such matters was generally respected, regarded the scheme as impracticable, but the work went on.

The result was so satisfactory that orders for this form of engine began to come in and other manufacturers began to build them. The next steamboat to receive her engines from the New England works was the Sappho, the boat whose speed so attracted the attention of Mr. J. W. Slater that he determined to have his new yacht furnished with the same style of engine. Then came the Winthrop for the New York line, and her reputation was almost immediately established among the coast-steamers. The tests which have been made with the Sagamore's engine show that this will be no disappointment, every part working with care and precision.

The advantages secured by the triple expansion engine are little understood, save by a few engineers, though of very great value. The one most likely to be noticed by the ordinary person is the smoothness of this engine's motion which does away with the disagreeable jar that has been so much objected to in screw steamers. This result is reached by setting the shaft cranks at different angles so that while one piston is lifting, another is pressing down, thus throwing the whole shock into the engine bed itself. Another gain which appears in the decreased bill for running expenses is in the saving of fuel. While only so much steam is required to run this form of engine as would be needed for a single cylinder engine with a piston head of the same size as that in the smallest cylinder of the compound one more than double the power is secured by the extra surface exposed to its action in the two additional cylinders of the triple expansion engine. A very few quadruple expansion engines have been constructed but experience seems to show that the triple form is able to develop about all the energy there is in the steam while the little advantage gained by the fourth piston is about counter balanced by the additional machinery necessitated by it.

As a natural result of this device for using steam in successive cylinders the pressure in the boiler has been constantly increased in order that the expansive power of the active steam might be the greater until pressure of from 160 to 180 pounds to the square inch are common to such boats. The results of these improvements have been made manifest in the increased speed which has characterized modern steamers and it is to be expected that the two vessels now being completed at the New England Company's wharf will be perfectly able to maintain the reputation which our Bath ship builders have always held of sending out the finest wooden vessels afloat.

Wednesday evening during the thunder shower, lightning struck a barn on the premises of Mr A W Gilman in Foxcroft, setting it on fire and entirely destroying it with five cows a yoke of oxen and two calves. Another barn was also burned and it was only by hard work that his other buildings were saved. The barns contained some hay and nearly all his farming tools all of which were lost. Mr Gilman went into the barn and got out a mare belonging to Mr [illegible] Mayo and one owned by himself but when he went to get the cattle out the fire had gained such headway as to drive him back before he could untie one of them. From their appearance he thought the cattle might have been stunned by the bolt as they made no movement to escape. There was an insurance of four hundred dollars on the barns but nothing on the stock or tools. At this writing Mr Gilman had made no estimate of his loss.

REPUBLICAN STATE CONVENTION
—WILL BE HELD IN—
CITY HALL, PORTLAND,
Tuesday, June 12, 1888,
AT 11 O'CLOCK A. M.

For the purpose of nominating a candidate for Governor, to be supported at the September election, and transacting any other business that may properly come before it.

The basis of representation will be as follows: Each city, town and plantation will be entitled to one delegate, and for each seventy-five votes cast for the the Republican candidate for Governor in 1886, an additional delegate, and for a fraction of forty votes in excess of seventy-five votes, a further additional delegate. Vacancies in the delegation of any city, town or plantation can only be filled by residents of the county in which the vacancy exists.

The State Committee will be in session in the reception room of the Hall at nine o'clock on the morning of the Convention, for the purpose of receiving the credentials of delegates.

All electors of Maine, without regard to past political differences, who believe in protecting the industries of this State and its agricultural products, who believe in protecting the laborer and the wage earner in every right, who believe "in opposing a policy which inspires labor with hope and crowns it with dignity; which gives safety to capital and protects its increase, which secures political power to every citizen, comfort and culture to every home," giving free popular education to the people, in favor of free suffrage and an honest counting of ballots, who approve the prohibition of the liquor traffic and the promotion of the cause of temperance, in an economical, just and efficient administration of public affairs, faithfully administered civil service, and who hold all judicious measures for the encouragement of American shipbuilding, are cordially invited to unite with the Republicans in the selection of delegates to this Convention.

Per Order Republican State Committee.
J. H. MANLEY, Chairman.
ELIH H. WING, Secretary.
Augusta, April 30, 1888.

Arrangement of Trains.

The Republican State Committee have made the following railroad arrangements for the Republican State Convention:

MAINE CENTRAL RAILROAD. Tickets for any train Monday and Tuesday, June 11th and 12th, from Aroostook County and Eastern Maine, good to return on any train Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, June 12th, 13th and 14th, can be had at one fare the round trip. At all other points on the Maine Central tickets will only be sold good for any train going to Portland on the 11th and 12th, good for a return Tuesday and Wednesday, the 12th and 13th. Special trains will be run from Bangor, Skowhegan and Farmington, to Portland, on the morning of the Convention, returning after the adjournment. The train from Bangor and Skowhegan to Portland, will run via Lewiston. Delegates on the line of the Kennebec can take the early morning trains on the day of the Convention.

BANGOR & PISCATAQUIS RAILROAD. One fare for round trip. Tickets for all trains Monday and Tuesday, June 11th and 12th, return Tuesday and Wednesday, June 12th and 13th.

INTERNATIONAL STEAMSHIP CO. One fare for round trip.

Seats in City Hall will be reserved for Delegates who will be admitted by tickets so classified as to town and county delegations together. Delegates will obtain their tickets of the member of the State Committee from their respective counties, upon presentation of credentials on morning of Convention to the State Committee, which will be in session to receive the same in the anteroom of the Hall.

The Lumber Clause.

The Maine delegation made a strong contest to strike out the free lumber clause in the Mills bill, but were outvoted by the Democratic free traders, who, while willing to grant protection to the industries of those States that return Democratic majorities, such as Louisiana, for instance, care nothing about the prosperity of Maine which is a Republican State. The irrational and preposterously wild assertions of the free trade gentlemen like Mr. Outhwaite, who credits the Maine lumbermen with a profit of 27½ per cent., were riddled by the Maine delegation, but the lumbermen were down for the sacrifice and no amount of argument would suffice to alter the purpose of Mr. Mills and his free trade colleagues. In the debate Tuesday Mr. Boutelle took up the assertion of Mr. Outhwaite as to the profits of the lumber business in this State, which every dealer, Republican or Democrat, knows to be ridiculously out of joint with the facts, and showed that the gentlemen who are so glibly discussing the lumber clause from a free trade standpoint are absolutely ignorant of the actual condition of this great industry. Starting with the tree in the forest Mr. Boutelle traced its course to the time it is manufactured into sawed lumber, fully illustrating the absurdity of the great profits with which the Maine lumbermen are credited. Instead of thus coining money Mr. Boutelle stated what is the fact, and will be so recognized by practical business men, that the lumber industry has been carried on upon the closest margin for years, so close in fact that were it not for the slight advantage they gain from the short lumber the margin would disappear altogether. Yet in spite of these facts which they can only meet with such grotesque statements about profits as that referred to the Democrats propose to force this bill through the House if possible. This is the interesting measure indorsed by the National Democratic Convention in St. Louis and which the Democratic voters of this State will be asked to indorse this fall. Democratic lumbermen know that free competition with Canada will ruin their business in this State. Will they vote against their own interests in September?

In a Bad Way.

Editor Rust of the Belfast Age is in doubt whether any resolutions were adopted in the Democratic State Convention, so has adopted a license platform of his own and hoists it at the head of his columns. The Age has the courage of its convictions at least which is more than can be said of its party. Concerning the proceedings when the platform was under consideration the Age says:

A viva voce vote was taken and the chairman declared that the ayes had it. This simply brought the minority report before the convention. But nothing more was done. The question should have been upon the adoption of the report as amended. But no such motion was made or put.

There is also a hitch over the State Committee matter. A delegate moved to discharge the old committee, but a point of order was raised and a motion to adjourn prevailed leaving the matter in an "equivocal position" that leads the Age to remark: "It remains to be seen what course the old committee will take in the face of so uncomplimentary action of the convention." This indicates a strange muddle on the part of the convention and if the Age is correct the party is without a platform and no one seems to know whether the old or new State Committee is to manage the campaign. The delegates possibly devoted too much time to considering the effects of temperance legislation to notice small details of parliamentary rules.

With Full Ranks.

The Republican State Convention meets in Portland next Tuesday and the friends of Mr. Burleigh should be in attendance with full ranks. It is a long distance from the extreme eastern portion of the State to Portland and some gentlemen might feel disinclined to take the journey on the ground that a few delegates more or less would make no difference in view of Mr. Burleigh's lead in the race. The way to make a successful contest is to keep it up to the end, leaving nothing to chance. Over confidence in a gubernatorial canvass as well as in a campaign is always dangerous to success. We believe Mr. Burleigh will be nominated on the first ballot, but every delegation should attend the convention with its full quota. Let Eastern Maine be fully represented at Portland.

An Explanation Needed.

The bold, straightforward, statesmanlike manner in which the platform deals with the great issue of the campaign must commend itself to every honest and unprejudiced mind.—Commercial.

There is something wrong here. The platform adopted in the Democratic National Convention indorses and recommends the early passage of the Mills bill now pending in Congress. One of the provisions of that bill and one the Maine delegation has unsuccessfully attempted to have stricken out, is the free admission of lumber, a clause that is of the greatest interest to our Maine people because it means the practical destruction of our leading industry. So true is this that even the Commercial is on record as declaring that free lumber would be "a gratuitous injustice to our people," and yet we now find it indorsing a platform that indorses free lumber as commending "itself to every honest and unprejudiced mind." Will our contemporary please explain this startling inconsistency, or has it flopped back to its old free trade ground of 1884?

"Tell the Truth."

The Republicans are welcome to all the comfort they can get out of Oregon. That little State went for Blaine in 1884 by about the same majority it has now given to Blaine's party. Mr. Cleveland got along very well without it then and he can do without it now.—Boston Globe.

Our Democratic contemporaries are welcome to all the comfort they can get from a distortion of plain facts concerning the Oregon election. The readers of Democratic papers even cannot be deceived by such silly tactics. They know that Oregon has just rolled up the largest Republican victory since the war, and so does the Globe, notwithstanding its disinclination to "tell the truth." The St. Louis convention was already to shout over Oregon, it being firmly believed that the lieutenants of the Administration, who have been hard at work in the State for some time, would be able to shape the verdict to their liking, but when the returns came in it was found that Cleveland, free trade and bogus reform had been overwhelmingly repudiated.

A Mugwump Suggestion.

With an assumption of innocence that is both childlike and bland the Boston Herald urges the Republicans to be moderate in their tariff plank. It says:

They may gain New Jersey and Connecticut with an extreme position on the tariff. We admit this to be possible. But, may they not gain them as easily by a more moderate course? And will they not, in this way, much more be likely to hold Indiana, to say nothing of Michigan, Minnesota, or other Western States that may be threatened by an extreme attitude on the tariff question?

Of course the Herald is just pining for Republican success, and would feel dreadfully bad should the party endanger its prospects in the Northwest by some rash indorsement of the protective policy. The fact is the Herald with all its shouting for tariff reform, or free trade, knows that the great principle of protection has the support of the majority of the American people and it would like to see the Republicans assume a passive attitude in the coming campaign, but it is doomed to disappointment. The Republican platform will make a square issue with the free trade policy of the Democratic party which has just been repudiated in Oregon by the largest Republican majority since the war. The Herald has been one of the papers that has insisted on the growth of the free trade idea in the West, but its solicitude about the Republican platform shows that it has no faith in its own predictions.

Glorifying the Ex-Confederates.

Confederate Memorial Day in Baltimore furnished General Bradley T. Johnson, of that city, and formerly of Virginia, with an opportunity to make a red hot rebel speech. A number of ex-Confederate soldiers were gathered about him at the cemetery. In part he said:

The South is progressing; she is not dead. These old Confederate soldiers and their descendants elect ninety out of every hundred Congressmen, thirty-four of the United States Senators, and the President of the United States. (Applause.) The Government of the United States is controlled by Confederate soldiers. These old Confederate soldiers are not idle. Their work for twenty-six years in government, in railroads and industrial enterprises of all sorts, is making itself felt all over this land.

In 1890 Texas will will send twenty-five men to Congress. The anxiety will be then, not who can carry New York in the election, but who can win in Texas. (Applause.) Every Confederate soldier carries with him chained to his heart a casket of his dead hopes and aspirations, all through his life, as Douglas did the heart of Bruce to the Holy Land, to show his devotion to the cause for which he fought. If the time should ever come, and it were necessary, there are ten thousand in Maryland who would stand for their cause as Douglas did for Bruce. I have been respected. I have no sympathy with that slush and sentimentality that is always gushing over to the other people. I won't do that. I recall the sentimentality exhibited by some just before the eightieth birthday of Jefferson Davis, a man who, of all the Confederates, has been singled out by his enemies, and branded by malice and prejudice, and kept from his rights. I cannot forget Jefferson Davis. He is a patient statesman and a hero. He is renowned for his patriotism. I hope he will go down to his grave with the disfranchisement his enemies have put upon him, for I am sure he has no desire for it to be otherwise, and would never accept the right of suffrage except by unanimous consent, of which there is not the remotest hope. Let him rest in peace in his old age.

"A Protection Victory."

Under the above caption the New York World revises its assertion that no change had taken place in Oregon, and says:

The Oregon election on Monday was a more decided success for Republican high-protectionism than the first reports indicated.

At the corresponding elections in June for the past six years the Republican majorities for Congressman have been as follows: In 1882, 3,305; in 1884, 2,047; in 1886, 1,636. Mr. Blaine's majority was 2,256. This year the majority is higher than the largest figure in this record, reaching probably to 4,000.

The Legislature, upon which a sharp contest was made for the choice of a United States Senator, is Republican by a greatly increased majority—almost a clean sweep.

The result may frankly be admitted to be due to the hostility among the voters of Oregon to the proposition to put lumber and wool upon the free list. The State is largely interested in both these staples. It is to be remembered that, taking the country through, a vastly greater number of people are more concerned to get cheaper clothing, blankets and houses than in artificially high wool and lumber.

But the first gun of the campaign signalizes a Republican-protectionist gain.

Possibly the Commercial may gain some light from this statement of the situation by the leading Democratic paper in the country. The World naturally tries to hedge a little on the verdict, but has to admit that the first gun of the campaign signalized a Republican-protectionist gain.

EXPENSES.
No part of the cost of insurance is so directly and really under the control of the management as the expense account. It is easier to save money, than to earn it, and the possible savings are a large part, of the possible dividends. The company with a low expense ratio is certain in the long run, if otherwise as well managed, to pay better dividends than one with a high expense ratio, and economy does not generally go with bad management in other respects.—Jacob L. ...re of Scrofula

Scrofula is probably more general than any other disease. It is insidious in character, and manifests itself in running sores, pustular eruptions, boils, swellings, enlarged joints, abscesses, sore eyes, etc. Hood's Sarsaparilla expels all trace of scrofula from the blood, leaving it pure, enriched, and healthy.

"I was severely afflicted with scrofula, and over a year had two running sores on my neck. Took five bottles Hood's Sarsaparilla, and am cured." C. E. LOVEJOY, Lowell, Mass.

C. A. Arnold, Arnold, Me., had scrofulous sores for seven years, spring and fall. Hood's Sarsaparilla cured him.

Salt Rheum

is one of the most disagreeable diseases caused by impure blood. It is readily cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla, the great blood purifier. William Spies, Elyria, O., suffered greatly from erysipelas and salt rheum, caused by chewing tobacco. At times his hands would crack open and bleed. He tried various preparations without aid, finally took Hood's Sarsaparilla, and now says: "I am entirely well." "My son had salt rheum on his hands and on the calves of his legs. He took Hood's Sarsaparilla and is entirely cured." J. B. STANTON, Mt. Vernon, Ohio.

OH! MY HEAD.

The pain from Neuralgia and its companion disease Rheumatism is excruciating. Thousands who have been quickly cured are needlessly suffering. Ath-lo-pho-ros will do for others what it did for the following parties:

Williamsport, Ind., Oct. 8, 1887. Having been afflicted with neuralgia for the past four years, and trying almost everything, but in vain, I finally heard of Athlophoros. After taking one bottle I found it to be helping me, and after taking four bottles of Athlophoros and one of Pills, I found that I was entirely well. I think the medicine is positively a sure cure.

BURIED ALIVE.

STORIES TOLD OF LIVING PEOPLE BEING PUT IN THE GRAVE.

The Number of Well Authenticated Cases Is Small—Why Superficial Observers Are Likely to Be Mistaken—Some Natural Explanations.

To be buried while only apparently dead and to come back to life in a coffin four feet under earth is, of course, a dreadful thing, and the fear of people to meet this terrible fate has at all times been proportionately strong. It has resulted in all kinds of designs and plans to enable persons in case of premature burial to inform the living world of the horrible mistake. If we inquire into the matter a little more closely, however, we will find that such a fear is unreasonable. In fact, our readers will be surprised to hear us ask:

Have people ever been buried alive?

True, we cannot absolutely deny such occurrences, for several cases have been reported under competent medical supervision, but the number of well authenticated cases is really so small that we must look upon them as a thing extremely rare. In fact, it would be safer to take the risk of meeting this accident for every person living upon the globe this minute than to get on a train for only one hour. In the face of these facts we would naturally put the question:

Why is it that such cases are reported or believed to have taken place so often?

The answer to this is easy. People who do not know the wonderful working of the system are liable to misinterpret certain rare and abnormal manifestations. They do not remember that every rule has its exceptions, even as applied to the human organism; in short, they do not fully understand the nature of death and hence will sometimes confound it with life. We will be a little less abstract to illustrate. We often hear the remark: "I don't believe such and such a person is dead. Just remember how red his cheeks were, even up to the day of his burial." True, the characteristic appearance of the dead is that waxy and pale aspect known to everybody. However, the mere manner of dying may determine an exception to this rule. So the face presents a bluish coloration, where death has been the result of a disturbance in the functions of the lungs (or, to be more exact, of the lesser circulation). Here we can enumerate all cases of hanging, drowning, suffocation, coal gas, poisoning, etc.

OTHER EXCEPTIONS.

A still more striking, but also rare exception, occurs in people with habitually red faces. In their case a bright arterial hue may remain up to the time of burial, although death may be absolute in every sense. People also believe that a hand held up against a light denotes life as long as the margin shows a reddish, semi transparent aspect. While this test is a reliable one, it does not hold true in people dead with dropsy. Here the transparency will be preserved in spite of death. Another sign formerly employed by medical men as infallible has spread among the public. It is known that the application of mustard to the skin causes redness and blisters in the living body. We can therefore always conclude as to the persistence of life whenever such an application reacts. Unfortunately, however, the plaster might not show any results when life is not yet extinct and recovery is still possible. This has been observed in cases of extreme intoxication by means of narcotics, such as morphine. The fact that pricking of the skin is followed by the appearance of a drop of blood is often cited as a proof for the existence of life. Now, everybody knows that such is possible also some limited time after death, although the manner of appearing and the shape and color of the drop differ from that drawn from a living body. The peculiar signs mentioned at the beginning of this article, and usually considered so conclusive, also find more natural explanations than the absurd theory of apparent death.

A body may change its original position while being lowered into the grave. Biting in the fingers and scratches in the face may be due to rats infesting the grave yards; noises referred to a coffin are usually the result of an over excited imagination. In fact, there is no sense more liable to deception than audition, especially when we want to hear. Everybody remembers, perhaps, how often he thought he heard the train arrive when anxiously waiting for it.

THRILLING STORIES.

There is, however, good reason to think that many of these stories are manufactured without the presence or observation even of any of the above signs. It is only natural to the human mind that, with their profound exciting power, they should be in equal demand with the over and again repeated ghost and snake stories. It would be a pity to leave them out from the list, when the narrator can enjoy the pleasure of seeing an eager audience follow every motion of his (most usually her) lips, and then, how sublime to be looked upon as the witness, or as even a more interested party, of such a thrilling experience! It is worth the sacrifice of a little veracity! In fact, every careful observer cannot fail to discover in the numerous accounts the variations of one original true or fancied case to suit the particular taste of the author.

But there is one post-mortem occurrence which, at least to the laity, might at first seem incompatible with death. It is sometimes observed that dead people will change the position of certain parts. So it is seen that after life has escaped the mouth is open, because the lower jaw, following the laws of gravity, hangs down drooping. In some four to twelve hours the mouth may be found closed. This is due to the peculiar phenomenon known by the name rigor mortis, which, being essentially a coagulation of the muscle substance, results in contraction and the latter in movements. Of course a part would always be moved in the direction of the stronger muscles or the flexors. While these movements go on gradually and are hardly visible we witness, occasionally sudden or spasmodic movements. Thus a knee may suddenly rise up in bending itself. An arm may sweep through the air with a quick motion or the muscles of the face may be twitching. The purposeless and inco-ordinate character makes these manifestations appear so much more as expressions of distress and helplessness as would be the case in a living person considered dead. After death from cholera these occurrences are relatively often observed.—Cincinnati Commercial Gazette.

The Famous "Oaken Bucket."

Mrs. Betsey Torrey, of Scituate, Mass., who is 90 years old, says that in her youth she lived at the Northey homestead, near Scituate, where Woodworth wrote the "Old Oaken Bucket." Many is the time she has lowered the famous bucket into the well, and drank deep draughts of the pure spring water. She has no idea that it was better than the water that flows from nickel plated faucets.

By the etiquette of congress representatives are called "gentlemen," but United States senators are "senators."

DANGEROUS TO HANDLE HIDES.

Warning to Those Who Work in Leather Stores—Blood Poisoning.

The death of Thomas Young some time ago, a workman in a Spruce street wholesale leather house, from poison received in handling hides, has caused talk among leather dealers. William Patch, said: "I see that Young thought that he had been bitten by some insect that burrowed in a hide. I differ from that. I have known of poisonous insects, such as the scorpion, to be found in the hides, but never knew of any men being bitten by them. Young probably raised a bundle of hides to his shoulder, and it scratched his neck, causing an abrasion of the skin, through which the poison in the hide entered his system. In my father's tannery, over thirty-five years ago, I used to see men with their arms frightfully swollen through having been poisoned in handling hides. One man employed here in Spruce street lost an eye in this way. Physicians, in making an autopsy, may be poisoned similarly if any abrasion of their skin is exposed to the virus of any diseased organ of a subject they are examining. Most of the hides likely to be diseased come from the East Indies, the Argentine Confederation and other foreign ports. I have never known men to be poisoned in handling our own American hides, which are pretty sure to come from stock that has been killed."

G. B. Horton said: "There is no more dangerous illness that a man can suffer from than that of blood poisoning from coming in contact with the hide of an animal that has died of a virulent disease. If I should be poisoned in this way in the head or neck I should go home and make my will. [illegible] is poisoned in the hand his [illegible] recovery is good; but [illegible] the kind of neck, [illegible]

our own employ, from the same cause that killed Young. Hides include those of animals that have been killed and whose skins are healthy; those of fallen cattle, or those that have been frozen or died of starvation, whose minute blood vessels in the fleshy part of the hide, coagulate and turn the skin black; and lastly, of those of diseased cattle, that also turn black and have patches of hair gone in places. Of course, the ordinary workman cannot make these distinctions, but they can protect themselves from danger if they would cover any abrasion of the skin at once with court plaster or wear gloves when at work. There is no danger in handling our native hides, because the men west don't remove the skin from an animal that has died of any disease.

"The most dangerous hides come from countries where the workmen are very poor and labor for a few cents a day. Particularly dangerous hides come from the East Indies, Central America and Mexico. When one of our own men, Samuel McWilliams, died some years ago from blood poisoning, resulting from handling hides, it was said that he died from arsenical poisoning. This was wrong, as the amount of arsenic used in curing a hide so that insects can't eat it is infinitesimal and could not harm any one. The first symptom of blood poisoning from a diseased hide that appears in the victim is a red spot with a hard white center, similar in appearance to the sting mark of a bee. After a few hours the affected part begins to swell rapidly, and the disease speedily affects a considerable portion of the body. Handling hides will continue to be a most dangerous business until the men learn to take proper precautions in their work."—New York Sun.

He Wasn't a Woman.

There are a good many strange features in London journalism. For some years past a writer, whose signature was "Miranda," furnished sundry columns of feminine gossip every week to The Lady's Pictorial, and now it comes as rather a shock to the readers of that paper to discover that "Miranda" was a male individual and bore the name of Archibald McNeill. Young girls, middle aged girls, elderly girls—girls of all sorts, in fact—poured their confidences into "Miranda's" ear. They wrote asking him to expound dark points regarding stockings and frilling; they consulted him on cosmetics and hair washes and things that would remove pimples, they took his opinion on the subject of trimmings for delicate garments which are worn in the silent watches of the night, and "Miranda" answered them all and breathed soft confidences into the pink ear of the public. They all gave themselves away under the impression that he was a woman, and he wasn't a woman after all.

And now "Miranda" has come to a sudden end. It would have been all right, doubtless, if he had confined himself strictly to writing woman items, as that is an occupation at which comparatively few men get murdered if they are ordinarily careful, but he went away to report the Smith-Kilrain prize fight, and a day later his dead body was found in the Seine. The man who had so long dispensed sage advice on stockings and corsets and other articles of underclothing had been robbed and strangled by some French ruffian, and the poor fellow has carried with him into eternity an extensive knowledge of how the British woman is made up.—Philadelphia Press.

An Incident in High Life.

A young millionaire of this city, who inherited a celebrated grocery establishment, the revenues of which he yet enjoys, narrates an experience that he recently had in high life. The impending marriage of a member of the "upper few hundred," who had once been a schoolmate of his, and with whom he had kept up an acquaintance, was announced. He did not get an invitation to the dude's wedding, but was favored with a note from him: "You will be surprised at not receiving an invitation to my wedding, but really I must be frank with you. I have a high regard for you personally, but you are a grocer, and I regret to tell you that the appearance of a groceryman at my wedding would give offense to the society people who are to be present," etc., etc.

This awful slight has not entirely destroyed the successor of his father in the grocery line. He is rather pleased to tell that he has had a visit from a society swell who was so happy as to be favored with an invitation to the wedding and who asked the privilege of borrowing enough money to buy an outfit worthy of the occasion. The grocer loaned him the cash, and the best man at the wedding will appear in a suit that has been paid for by the grocer to whom the groom could not send an invitation.—New York Sun.

One Way to Get Rich.

A story has lately been told that illustrates A. T. Stewart's noted economic spirit. He had given a dinner and theatre party, and instead of taking his guests to the theatre in carriages, as they had expected, he hailed a stage and democratically hustled them all into it. Judge and Mrs. Hilton were of the party. While paying the fares Mr. Stewart dropped a piece of money, and during almost the entire trip kept turning up the straw in the bottom of the stage in search of it. Judge Hilton, who was sitting near him, took from his pocket a nickel, and, passing it to the millionaire, said: "For heaven's sake, Mr. Stewart, put this in your pocket and don't kick up any more dust with that straw."—New York Sun.

Where It Got Its Name.

Many persons have wondered how doing a lively galop got to be called "dancing the racquet." Mrs. Simmons, a well known young lady of Washington, composed a few years ago a galop and was at a loss to give it a name. One day, being disturbed by children in the room, she called out: "Don't make such a racket," which was caught up and repeated by the children as they went out. It occurred to her that it was a good name for her piece, and so, with a touch of French, she called it the "Racquet Galop," and over 200,000 copies of it have been sold.—Philadelphia Times.

Didn't Quite Understand It.

Johann Schnell, a new messenger in the navy department at Washington, is extremely nervous regarding a telephone, never having seen one until a few days ago. He was obliged to answer a call from the instrument recently, and his incoherent answers exasperated the speaker at the other end of the line. "You must have been drinking," Schnell heard the angry individual exclaim. "No, I haven't," said the messenger, gently. "It must be the strong tobacco I am chewing that you smell."—New York World.

A Cure for Scandal.

Mrs. Dusenberry—What queer ways they have in some countries! This paper says that in Morocco when the women talk scandal their lips are rubbed with cayenne pepper.

Mr. Dusenberry—An odd custom indeed. (Half an hour later.) Where are you going, my dear?

Mrs. Dusenberry—To the sewing circle. Let me see; I've got my scissors, thread, thimble—

Mr. Dusenberry—And the cayenne pepper.—Detroit Free Press.

Cheap Paint for Outbuildings.

The American Cultivator recommends a mixture of hydraulic cement and skim milk for painting farm buildings and fences. The cement is placed in a bucket and sweet skim milk stirred in until the mixture is of the consistency of cream. The proportions are about one quart of cement to a gallon of milk. Color may be added if desired. This plan is cheap and durable.—Frank Leslie's.

Monogolian Pheasants in Oregon.

The farmers of Willamette valley, Ore., complain that the Monogolian pheasants introduced a few years ago and protected by law are becoming too numerous. In cold weather they crowd into the barns among domestic fowls, sometimes whipping barnyard cocks on their own dunghills, and making themselves as obnoxious as the "heathen Chinee."—Boston Budget.

In a Scotch Railway Station.

[Scene—Scotch railway station. Ticket collector, in making his collection, finds an old gentleman fumbling in his pockets for his ticket.] Ticket Collector—Tickets please? Old Gentleman—I'm just lookin' for it. Ticket Collector—Well, I'll look in again in a few minutes. See and have it ready then. Ticket collector returns shortly; but the old gentleman is still hunting for it. Ticket Collector (suddenly)—Why you have it in your mouth, man! Old Gentleman (giving him the ticket)—Oh, so I has! Here you are! Another Gentleman in the carriage, as the train moves on. Is first gentleman—I'm afraid [illegible] your memory, sir. Old Gentleman [illegible]

WHY SOME OF THEM ARE NOT PURE.

The absolute purity of the Royal Baking Powder is a fact not questioned by anyone, but the questions are frequently asked: Why do not other manufacturers, also, put up pure baking powders, free from lime, alum, and other adulterants? Is it a fact that the Royal is the only pure and wholesome baking powder made?

There are three classes of these articles: The cheap powders which are made of alum and are concededly poisonous; the phosphate powders containing from 8 to 12 per cent. of lime, which is an ingredient of the phosphate used in them, and inseparable from it; and the cream of tartar powders.

The cream of tartar baking powders, to which class the Royal belongs, to be pure must be made from absolutely pure materials. The ordinary cream of tartar of the market contains lime. The Royal Baking Powder is made from cream of tartar specially refined and prepared for its use by patent processes by which the lime is totally eliminated. There is no other process by which cream of tartar can be freed from lime—made 100 per cent. pure—in quantities practical for commercial purposes. Other baking powder makers, not being able to obtain these chemically pure goods (which are used exclusively in the Royal), are dependent upon the cream of tartar of the market, refined by the old-fashioned methods, by which it is impossible to remove the lime and other impurities.

These are the reasons why the Royal is absolutely pure, while other baking powders contain lime or alum.

The absolute purity of the Royal Baking Powder not only renders it more perfectly wholesome, but its freedom from all extraneous substances makes it of higher leavening strength and effectiveness.

Tar, Bloodroot, and Wild Cherry

COUGH CURE.

The most popular Cough Remedies of the day are those which contain the drugs mentioned above, and this is so in spite of the unpleasant taste and appearance which the Tar gives to them. Knowing this, we have endeavored to produce something in the form of a Syrup that should hold in solution the active ingredients of these valuable curatives, and at the same time present an attractive appearance and agreeable taste. How perfectly we have succeeded, the medicine itself will attest. We defy the efforts of every manufacturer in the wide world to produce results superior to what we show you in this elegant compound of TAR, BLOODROOT AND WILD CHERRY, and Constitutional Catarrh.

No single disease has entailed more suffering or hastened the breaking up of the constitution than Catarrh. The sense of smell, of taste, of sight, of hearing, the human voice, the mind—one or more, and sometimes all, yield to its destructive influence. The poison it distributes throughout the system attacks every vital force, and breaks up the most robust of constitutions. Ignored, because but little understood, by most physicians, impotently assailed by quacks and charlatans, those suffering from it have little hope to be relieved of it this side of the grave. It is time, then, that the popular treatment of this terrible disease by remedies within the reach of all passed into hands at once competent and trustworthy. The new and hitherto untried method adopted by Dr. Sanford in the preparation of his Radical Cure has won the hearty approval of thousands. It is instantaneous in affording relief in all head colds, sneezing, snuffling and obstructed breathing, and rapidly removes the most oppressive symptoms, clearing the head, sweetening the breath, restoring the senses of smell, taste and hearing, and neutralizing the constitutional tendency of the disease towards the lungs, liver and kidneys.

Sanford's Radical Cure consists of one bottle of the Radical Cure, one box Catarrhal Solvent and an Improved Inhaler. Price, $1.

LETTER CARRIERS.

All letters are delivered free by carriers when addressed to street and number. People should inform their correspondents of above and have their letters addressed accordingly.

Persons leaving their addresses at the General Delivery can also have their letters sent, but it is much more convenient to have the street and number on, and they will be delivered earlier than if the same is put on at the office. Carriers make two deliveries daily, the first trip supplying the extremes of their routes.

Collections are made morning, noon and evening in season for important mails.

Carrier's Window open from 7 to 8 P. M., Sundays excepted.

Holidays the Carrier's Window will be open for the delivery of letters from 7 to 9 A. M., and from 7 to 8 P. M. Sundays from 8 to 9 A. M.

Any irregularities in the Carrier's department should be reported to the office.

IMMEDIATE DELIVERY.

Messenger boys are constantly in attendance to deliver letters with immediate delivery stamps, on arrival of all mails, and for local letters from [illegible] to [illegible] which hour the office is closed. Persons depositing city letters will please pass them into the general delivery.

Letters arriving from West Sunday morning are delivered on arrival.

ENVELOPES.

No additional charge will be made for printing the name and request to return, across the left end upper corner of the envelopes furnished by the Post Office Department, (samples of which may be seen at the Carrier's window) when ordered in lots of not less than 500.

A request for the return of a letter to the writer if not called for within thirty days or less, written or printed, with the writer's name, post office and State, across the left end of the envelope, on the face side, will be complied with.

The public are earnestly requested to procure Stamped Envelopes with printed return request, as the expense is less, and letters thus endorsed, if not delivered to the person addressed, are returned to the writer free of charge.

First class envelopes of above furnished at $21.50 per 1000.

Stamps cut from Stamped Envelopes cannot be used to prepay postage. The use of such stamps is punishable by a fine of fifty dollars. Stamped Envelopes, spoiled in directing, are redeemed at this office.

Upon matter of third or fourth class the sender may write his own name or address with the word "from," without extra charge for postage.

Third and fourth class matter may be registered same as first class, on payment of the register fee of 10 cents.

ADVERTISED LETTERS.

All letters remaining in this office are advertised on Monday of each week. If not claimed in ONE MONTH thereafter, they are then forwarded to the Dead Letter Office.

MONEY ORDERS.

Especial attention is called to the Money Order system, as a safe and cheap method of transmitting in small sums through the mails. Orders are issued for amounts not more than one hundred dollars. Larger amounts can be transmitted to the same person, at the same time, by additional orders.

THE ZOAR COMMUNITY.

A VISIT TO OHIO'S SETTLEMENT OF MYSTICS AND COMMUNISTS.

A Village Surrounded by a Fertile Country on the Banks of the Tuscarawas. Manufactures—Cattle Breeding—The Fair Sex—Amusements, Etc.

This settlement of German mystics and communists is a complete little kingdom in itself, and not such a very little kingdom, either. The Zoarites own 7,000 acres of land in one tract, of which half is under cultivation, while the remainder is heavily timbered with valuable walnut, oak and pine trees. Their original purchase here was 10,000 acres, but 3,000 have been sold from time to time at a great advance over first cost.

Every article, implement or machine that is used, wrought with, eaten, drank or worn by the Zoarites is produced in Zoar, as are also the materials of which it is composed. The only exceptions to this rule are coffee, tea, sugar and spices. The shoes the Zoarites wear are made by their own shoemakers from leather prepared by their own tanners from hides taken from their own cattle. The coal that warms them and cooks their food is dug in their own mines and is burned in stoves cast in their own foundry from iron smelted in their own furnaces from ore found in abundance on their own lands. The clothing that covers them is made by their own tailors from cloth woven in their own mill from wool sheared from their own sheep. The beer they drink is brewed in their own brewery from malt made by their own maltsters and hops grown on their own lands.

All manufacturing in Zoar is done by water power. Steam is scarcely used at all. The Tuscarawas river, by means of dams, is made to flow with sufficient swiftness and volume to supply thirty or forty horse power to each of the Zoarite manufactories. Nearly all the machinery used was made in Zoar by Zoarite mechanics. One of their principal products is flour, of which, after supplying their own wants, they ship large quantities to Pittsburg, Cleveland, Washington and Baltimore.

THE COW STABLES.

One of the chief places of interest in Zoar is the great collection of immense barns, in which the milch cattle are kept. A considerable portion of the Zoarites' wealth is invested in their live stock, and they have devoted much attention to determining what are really the best breeds. They have experimented largely with the Holstein, the Jersey, the Alderney and the Durham, and are now inclined to favor the last named, though all four varieties are well represented in their herds.

Every sanitary and convenient device that modern ingenuity has been able to suggest is utilized in the construction of these cow stables. The stalls extend in long rows on either side of a broad aisle, and the conditions for light and ventilation are of the most favorable kind. Already the cows are out at pasture, and it is a rare sight to see the mild faced, patient creatures come filing in at eventide in a seemingly interminable procession, each one knowing her accustomed place and going voluntarily to it without the slightest disturbance or confusion.

On the morning and evening of each day all the young women in Zoar repair in merry procession to these barns and milk the cows. As members of congress sometimes are for a much less useful purpose, the girls are "paired," and each two are assigned eight cows, which they must always milk. Fancy more than thirty buxom young milkmaids, with the good looks which are the offspring of good health, outdoor exercise and good diet sparkling in their eyes, lips and cheeks. Each one is tastefully dressed in well fitting chintz or calico, and wears a white apron, which, like everything else about these most attractive young women, is scrupulously neat and clean.

Another place in which to see the Zoarite young women to advantage is the bakery, where all the bread and pies for the entire community are baked fresh every morning. From 75 to 100 loaves comprise the average daily consumption of the town. The baking is done by men, but each household sends its young women to the bakery to procure its supply of daily bread and carry it home, wrapped in a large, spotless white cloth, which each damsel carries with her.

"AIRING" THE LITTLE ONES.

Besides these quaint processions of young women to the cow stables and the bakery there is another similar one to be seen in Zoar on every pleasant day. That is, a procession of girls ranging from 8 to 13 years, each drawing in an old fashioned baby carriage a younger brother or sister for an airing. As all property in Zoar is held in common, so the Zoarites share equally and participate together in all their pleasures and duties. Thus even the babies of the society are "aired" simultaneously in a long drawn out procession.

For the pleasure of the members of the society and their visitors a public garden and a greenhouse are maintained in Zoar. Both are of considerable extent and would be highly creditable to any large city. The garden is tastefully laid out, and contains some noble trees and elegant shrubbery. A large and delightfully cool arbor in the center is entirely concealed by the latter. The greenhouse boasts a fine collection of choice plants and flowers. There is no prohibitory "No admittance" or "Hands off" on anything, and every one is free to enter at all times and roam about at will.

From the garden and greenhouse it is but a few steps to the picnic ground, a grove of grand old forest trees, in which the Zoarites have placed swings and a covered dancing platform for the enjoyment of their younger visitors, who in summer time come in large numbers from surrounding cities and towns as well as from the adjacent country and picnic here on two or three days of almost every week. But swinging and dancing are not the only amusements provided for these young people by their good friends the Zoars, who find their chief happiness in making others happy. Many beautiful pleasure boats are maintained here, and no stream could be better adapted for boating than the Tuscarawas river.

If any people in the world practically indorse, in every possible way, old John Wesley's saying that cleanliness is next to godliness, that people are the Zoarites. In the brewing of their beer, the making of their wine, the milking of their cows, the baking of their bread, and the slaughtering of their cattle, their chief object seems to be the attainment of the highest possible degree of cleanliness. Their slaughter house, where some magnificent beeves are killed daily, is a model in that particular. They are very fond of the pleasures of the table, and there are few city hotels whose bill of fare presents a greater variety than that of the Zoarite village inn, while none surpass it in excellence of cookery.—Zoar (O.) Cor. Chicago Times.

EQUESTRIANISM AND ITS RAPID GROWTH IN THIS COUNTRY.

How Roller Skating Rinks Are Utilized. Hints to Horseback Riders—The Model Saddle Animal, His Gaits and How to Control Him.

The frequent mention of numbers of clever horsemen among the leading society people has naturally revived the many experiences of the cavaliers of the past, and it is doubtful whether in peace or war that history can produce any more or better examples of horsemanship than the present day affords. In the olden days the equipments were crude and imperfect, as well as the animals themselves. The knowledge of the horse has advanced, and likewise all the appointments that appertain to thoroughly adapting him to modern gaits and uses. It is only recently that we have recorded a high jump of something over eight feet by a horse, and the longest jump is something like thirty-five feet by actual measurement. This, of course, applies to the trained hurdler or steeplechaser.

HOW THE PASTIME HAS GROWN.

Our hunting clubs are a fine school for horsemen, but they are, from the order of things, not accessible to every one. It is surprising to those who have not watched its progress—the vast increase in horseback riding. The roller skating rinks have served one useful and commendable purpose. All that have an eligible location have been sought by the teachers of riding schools, and instead of thousands toiling on rollers, we now have hundreds availing themselves of the rings in the old rinks in going the rounds with the riding master in the graceful walk, trot and lope on the back of the horse, receiving the pleasure of exercise accompanied by music and getting the benefit of the healthy pastime. Among the most attractive sights these pleasant spring days are the bridle paths specially provided for horseback riders in the park. There are hours in the day, however, when these bridle paths are inadequate to the wants of the multitude of accomplished horsemen escorting the fair sex, whose graceful figures as they flit around the curves add to the picturesqueness of the panorama.

To gather the most practical information possible an interview was sought by the reporter with an expert equestrian, who said: "There are two styles of saddle horses in use. One is the horse fashionable in Kentucky, whose gaits are the plain walk, running walk, single foot, trot and canter. The other is the English style, thoroughly bitted and in hand to walk, trot and canter only. My experience convinces me that Kentucky produces the best type of saddle horse, and they command the most money. Others like the Canadian horse. The taste for horses in Boston, Philadelphia and Washington is about the same. Few ride the Kentucky gaited horse. The popular horse here is the English style. The horse that is properly bitted and ready for the saddle should be ridden with a bit and bridoon, and be thoroughly broken as to guide by the neck, on the curb or snaffle, or by both jointly. In riding schools they are taught to ride with reins in each hand, same as they handle driving reins, whereas all from Kentucky and the south and west do not consider a horse a saddle horse until he will guide by the neck, that is an instructive idea. The reins should be in the left hand, so that the whip hand is always free for any purpose. In riding with the ladies on the road you should go on the lady's right hand, which will prevent running against the lady or any accidental collision. The amateur rider does not know what constitutes a saddle horse. The horse must have a good walk, good trot and good canter, and go at any rate of speed."

HOW TO MOUNT A HORSE.

It is interesting to notice the simple act of mounting a horse. It is important to combine grace with safety. The school or stylish custom is to stand with your back to the head of the horse, with the reins in the left hand resting upon the pummel of the saddle, your left foot in the stirrup, then with a swing encompassing a half circle you rise and settle in the saddle. The expert's method of mounting is to stand facing the side of the horse. You put the left foot in the stirrup, reins in the right hand and held taut, resting on the opposite side of the cantel or back of the saddle, then with a vault you will land easily in the saddle. This is also the most general custom, the only difference is to hold the reins and mane both with the left hand. All the while you have the animal under control, and in this position there is much less liability of accident from any unexpected movement, shying or fright of your horse by which the animal may be made to kick or get away from the rider.

There is another important and yet very simple fact little known, after being mounted, and that is the skill to start a horse. The reins should be held gently, not pulling, and there should be an almost imperceptible bending forward of the body, which to a trained saddle horse, is far better understood and more readily responded to than talking or clucking. The swinging of the body is sufficient and he instantly responds. A horse should never be started off abruptly and on the jump, as very many inconsiderate riders make a habit of doing. It startles a horse and is a bad habit, which grows upon him, and often the first spring of the horse in starting causes more accidents than the other faults in the animal. Always in starting out you should go off on a very slow walk. It restores confidence, and if the horse is inclined to nervousness that soon disappears, and then you pursue your journey with ease and pleasure.

The horse whose ancestors are real saddle horses is more pleasant and easier to ride and to cultivate and teach than one that is bred regardless of such characteristics. The saddle instinct has been bred in him for generations, and this instinct has been intensified by education until the true saddle horse is a distinct type.—New York Herald.

Arab Women in Their Bath.

The baths are the great places of rendezvous for the Arab women, who spend an afternoon there frequently, their hours being from 12 till 7, and they certainly deserve this much social intercourse. They are seen with their children in the streets going to the bath accompanied by a gorgeous negress carrying a bronze vessel filled with necessary articles and other baskets and bundles containing a complete change of linen, also several strips of orange blossoms. Orange flower water is not to be forgotten, for it enters extensively into their luxuries as a drink with their meals and as a perfume. For the latter purpose a bottle of brass, silver or gold, with long neck and a pepper box termination, is used, with which they sprinkle guests at home and friends at the bath as well as themselves. The baths, again, "take in washing," especially of heavy woolen burnooses, haiks, blankets, etc., which the attendants and the mouteho, a young boy servant, whose name is evidently of Spanish origin, wash with their feet and plenty of soap and water on the marble pavement in the hot room.—Harper's Magazine.

A Hard One in Division.

"I see," observed Mrs. Snaggs, "that the sultan of Zanzibar left twenty-seven widows."

"Yes," replied Snaggs, heartlessly, "he ripened a heavy crop of weeds very suddenly."

"That wasn't what I was thinking of. What I can't understand is how all those widows will get their thirds."—Pittsburg Chronicle.

She Knew Him Well.

"Have you a very, stylish young girl you could recommend me?" said a gentleman in an employment bureau.

"Excuse me, sir," replied the affable manager, "but do you live in the corner house?"

"Yes, but why do you ask?"

"Because your wife was here only a moment ago to see if we had a tow headed girl with a wart on her nose."—Judge.

ACROSS THE RUSSIAN FRONTIER.

The Boundary Post of Siberia—Heart Broken Exiles—The Farewell.

We sprang out of the tarantas and saw, standing by the roadside, a square pillar ten or twelve feet in height, of stuccoed or plastered brick, bearing on one side the coat of arms of the European province of Perm, and on the other that of the Asiatic province of Tobolsk. It was the boundary post of Siberia. No other spot between St. Petersburg and the Pacific is more full of painful suggestions, and none has for the traveler a more melancholy interest than the little opening in the forest where stands this grief consecrated pillar. Here hundreds of thousands of exiled human beings—men, women and children, princes, nobles and peasants—have bidden good-by forever to friends, country and home.

No other boundary post in the world has witnessed so much suffering, or been passed by such a multitude of heart broken people. More than 170,000 exiles have traveled this road since 1878, and more than half a million since the beginning of the present century. As the boundary post is situated about half way between the last European and the first Siberian etape, it has always been customary to allow exile parties to stop here for rest and for a last good-by to home and country. The Russian peasant, even when a criminal, is deeply attached to his native land, and heartrending scenes have been witnessed around the boundary pillar when such a party, overtaken perhaps by frost and snow in the early autumn, stopped here for a last farewell. Some gave way to unrestrained grief, some comforted the weeping, some knelt and pressed their faces to the loved soil of their native country, and collected a little earth to take with them into exile, and a few pressed their lips to the European side of the cold brick pillar, as if kissing good by forever to all that it symbolized.

At last the stern order "Stroisa!" ("Form ranks!") from the under officer of the convoy put an end to the rest and the leave taking, and at the word "March!" the gray coated troop of exiles and convicts crossed themselves hastily all together, and, with a confused jingling of chains and leg fetters, moved slowly away past the boundary post into Siberia.—George Kennan in The Century.

A Writer of Advertisements.

One would probably imagine that those unique and racy advertisements which begin with some startling adventure or scientific treatise and other interesting subjects, but invariably wind up with a glowing expatiation on the wonderful merits of some patent nostrum, are easily written and thrown off at hot haste by a ready writer. But they are only another instance of where it requires difficult study on the part of the writer to produce easy reading. I was engaged at a good salary to write that kind of articles about a certain kind of patent medicine, but at the end of two years I resigned. If I had not, I would have gone insane. I was required to write from ten to twelve different articles, each one not less than a quarter of a column, every day for various newspapers. For awhile everything went along smoothly, and I threw off the "ads" from my pen as only the fancies of an idle moment, but gradually the work grew more irksome and eventually it became really intolerable.

I had the whole field of science, travel, biography, and, in fact, all departments of literature to draw from and ingeniously weave into the articles the "ad" for the patent nostrum. After that I would take a walk through the streets the same as a newspaper reporter on his rounds and pick up any incidents to be worked over. This did not throw much variety into the work, however, because each article had to wind up with the invariable medicine "ad." The monotony became exceedingly painful. The constant thought on one topic, and the strain of study in evolving puzzling methods for utilizing facts and information for the subject, produced brain fever. The one wearing, monotonous thought of the medicine "ad" had burned itself into my very being and haunted me like a nightmare. My brain had had no opportunity for the recreation, elasticity and fascinating pleasure found in the varied, stimulative work of a newspaper writer, and nature revolted at the monotonous treatment it had received.—Globe-Democrat.

Southern Hotels in War Times.

While in Vicksburg after the siege I was afforded a fair trial of southern hotels as they existed in war times, and must confess that my experience in this connection was far from being a pleasant one. The floors and hallways of the hotels were generally unswept and unwashed, while, doubtless owing to the presence of our army, the servants suddenly became wholly unmanageable and consequently were few in number. As a rule the rooms were occupied by soldiers, some being sick, others with neglected wounds and quite a number who were shamming sickness. As a result, and in the absence of any sanitary rules, the rooms were in a sad plight as to cleanliness, while a disgusting odor pervaded the entire building.

It was wholly useless to seek for a separate apartment, and after registering one was assigned to a portion of a room and the whole or a part of a bed by paying $10. A single night's lodging cost $5, which entitled one to a lodging ticket and meal ticket. Arriving at your room, the servant, bowing obsequiously, usually apologized for the lack of everything needed for comfort by saying:

"Best in do house, sah, 'clar it am; solyahs done took abbery debblish thing 'bout de place, 'deed dey did, sah."

No towel, no soap, no bowl, no pitcher, no means of illumination, a bed of corn husks with a single sheet and a light coverlet, and from the beds having been occupied by soldiers, it excited no surprise to find vermin in abundance. If one could sleep under such circumstances he must needs be copper bound.—Boston Bulletin.

Shopping on Horseback.

A pretty woman, clad in orthodox riding attire, whose glossy brown curls were crowned by a derby hat, came riding down 125th street the other afternoon. She was an excellent horsewoman and presented a charming picture as her horse cantered by. In front of a meat market she turned her horse suddenly and dashed upon the sidewalk, pulling up before the shop door. The tradesman came out, bowing and smiling, the girl handed him a written order and then rode off, seemingly oblivious of the crowd her action had attracted, and that she had broken a city ordinance against riding on the sidewalk. She knew all about both, of course, but dared nothing, for she was living up to the latest whim of lovely womanhood, which is to combine horseback riding and shopping, the latest craze with the old reliable one.—New York Evening Sun.

A Timely Correction.

"There seems to be nothing in the market," said Mrs. Hendricks, despairingly, to the widow Jenkins, who had "just dropped in" for a moment. "I'm worried to death to know what to get for"—

"Why, ma," interrupted Bobby, who was laboriously pencilling his name on the wall, "I heard you say that Mrs. Jenkins was in the market."

The Collapsible Clerk.

A little miss from Dearborn avenue entered a North Clark street stationery store wearing an expression that plainly told that she knew just what she wanted. In truth, she had been repeating the name of the article she had been sent for from the time she had left her home, and thought she had it pat.

"Give me," said the little miss, "a dime's worth of stub toed pens."

And the clerk rolled up his eyes and flopped ... —Chicago Herald.

GENERAL SHERIDAN'S CONDITION

He Passes a Comfortable Day,

But Was Not So Well at Midnight.

WASHINGTON, June 8 Doctors Lincoln and Pepper came out of Gen Sheridan's residence at 4 30 A M and immediately left for their homes The former said that the patient was better and that the congestion of the lungs was somewhat lessened A few minutes afterward the following bulletin was issued

4 30 A M—The reaction continues to be well sustained There is no elevation of the temperature The pulse is 104 respiration 31. The mind is not clear The congestion of the lungs continues severe, but in the absence of fever indicates no development of extended inflammation

His Mind Perfectly Clear.

At 11 o clock the General was resting easily with no especial change in his physical condition His mind is perfectly clear this morning He asked his brother several questions about the political [illegible] of yesterday and made two or three characteristic comments on the information given

The organic diseases from which he suffers, however, remain unyielding. He was more or less delirious all the night though not violently, but he could not recognize the members of his family or his physicians and refused to take any medicine or nourishment About 5 o'clock this morning his mind cleared and he readily took peptonized milk Medicine was given hypodermically Each of the attacks which he has had lately have left him much weaker than the previous one His rallies have been but partial and unsatisfactory and altogether his case is a most desperate one From information received from high sources it is believed that the end is not far off

Rested Tranquil Up to 1 P M

1 P M—Gen Sheridan has been resting tranquilly all the morning His pulse is about 100, respiration 28 but varying his skin is warm and moist He coughs but little and his mind is clear

Not So Favorable at Midnight

Gen Sheridan's cough has increased somewhat since the last report This has made him restless and nervous His pulse is rather quicker but in good strength Respiration rather more frequent within the last two hours He takes nourishment with regularity and relishes it

CALLING UPON THURMAN.

Address to Newspaper Men.

COLUMBUS Ohio, June 8 A special train with Washington and New York newspaper correspondents, returning from the St Louis convention stopped at Columbus and escorted by the Jackson Club with music marched through the principal streets to the residence of Judge Thurman, where they were hospitably received by the Judge and his family Judge Thurman said

[illegible] conversation with Henry Ward Beecher [illegible] church in Brooklyn After [illegible] up and introduced to him I was then [illegible] the Senate Well said he you are pretty good looking man for Democrat and so talking back at you I say that you are all pretty good looking men for newspaper men (Laughter) I do not see that you are armed with swords or daggers, nevertheless I dare say you will do all that is right and required of you

All I have got to say after thanking you for the honor done me by this call is that if you want to be in a real service it will be to just write a speech for me, and be sure to put in here and there—great applause (Laughter) Also speak well of my stalwart health Say that you don't know any one except Mr Sullivan of Boston, that can bear comparison with me in that respect Do all this up in your best style, you know how better than I do and you will pay a great compliment to the old man—as they call him—young man [illegible] is of course, and oblige me immensely I thank you gentlemen for the honor you have done me by this call and [illegible] you will have a pleasant ride home

FIFTIETH CONGRESS—First Session

House

WASHINGTON June 8 Mr Dingley, of Maine, from the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries reported back his resolution calling upon the Secretary of the Treasury for information as to whether any order is now in force by which vessels from United States ports are required to pay less tolls in passing through the Welland and other Canadian canals when they pursue their voyages by the way of the St Lawrence and Montreal than when they pursue their voyages by the way of Lake Ontario to American ports and whether additional legislation is necessary to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to impose additional tolls upon vessels passing through the Sault St Marie and St Clair flats canals, bound to Canadian ports, in case the Dominion authorities continue discrimination against vessels bound to American ports, adopted

The tariff bill was then taken up in Committee of the Whole the salt paragraph being under consideration

Mr Grosvenor of Ohio, said his was a great salt producing district The tax on the people on account of salt amounts to about six cents per capita and if that small protection was removed salt could not be produced in the United States, and to a certainty the works in his district would be closed and the employes driven to other business or to starvation

Mr Cox, of New York pleaded for cheap salt Why should Congress discriminate against dairymen and in favor of the fish packer of New England?

Mr Belden denied that such was the case and added that Mr Cox did not know what he was talking about

Mr Cox replied that he had good authority for his statement He wanted to reduce the surplus and to reduce the cost of the breakfast table

Mr Burrows supposed it had been determined in caucus by the Democrats to pass the bill just as it stood and naturally they were indifferent to any fact that might be presented

Mr Tarsney, of Michigan, charged that the Republicans struck the first blow which brought down the salt industry in Michigan He quoted the utterances and votes of former and present Republican members of the House, of Messrs Hale, Hiscock, Burrows and Reed, in favor of free salt for packing meat and fish

Mr. Breckenridge, of Arkansas, said the [illegible] duty was class legislation, pure and simple, and wanted to know why the [illegible] of the West should be deprived of [illegible] cheap salt accorded to the New England fishermen

Mr. Hooker, of Mississippi, cited the treasury reports to show that sixty million people were paying tribute to 4,000 people engaged in the salt production

Motion by Mr. Burrows to strike out the paragraph was rejected

An amendment by Mr Grosvenor, of Ohio, to exclude bulk salt from the list admitting only dairy and table salt [illegible] with a similar fate.

Mr. Bayne, of Pennsylvania, offered an amendment to insert rice, cleaned and uncleaned, in the free list.

Four lines, 30, 31, 32 and 33, relating to [illegible], were read and Mr. Browne, of Indiana, moved to strike them out of the free [illegible]

Pending debate the Committee rose, the House took a recess until 8 o'clock. At the evening session the House passed [illegible] three private pension bills, and adjourned.

ATTEMPTED TRAIN ROBBERY.

A Baggage Master Shot Four Times.

CINCINNATI, June 8 A little after 10 to-night American Express messenger J. H. Zimmerman and Baggage Master Joe Ketchum were alone together in the express and baggage car of the Cincinnati, Indianapolis, St. Louis and Chicago Railroad train, due here at 11 o'clock. Zimmerman, when the train left Delhi, 12 miles west, called Ketchum's attention to some tramps he saw through the glass window leading to the platform next to the locomotive, Both men arose and went toward the front door and when within ten feet the tramps began firing through the glass window. Ketchum fell, shot in four places, two balls entering his abdomen, one his breast and one his left shoulder.

Zimmerman Tried to Draw a Pistol

but it stuck in his pocket. He retreated to the rear platform of the car where he met the conductor The latter pulled the bell rope and stopped the train While this was going on one of the tramps climbed on the tender, where he was met by the engineer and fireman, and knocked stiff by two blows from a monkey wrench The engineer and fireman then rolled him off the tender while the train was at full speed Before he was thrown overboard, however a second robber attempted to climb on the tender, but weakened and dodged back at the sight of the prostrate form of his companion

more than one robber was seen to jump off and disappear in the darkness All were masks that completely covered their faces Not a word was spoken by the robbers and not a shot was fired at them They fired not less than fifteen shots Zimmerman says he saw four men distinctly The police, mounted and on foot, aided by a large force, are patrolling the river front and scouring the country to intercept the robbers

THE SALMON FISHING But one salmon was taken yesterday and that at half past two o'clock in the morning by Mr William G Wentworth, of Brewer weighing thirteen pounds It was landed in a novel manner a harpoon being used instead of the gaff That our salmon are appreciated abroad may be seen by the following Mr Archibald Mitchell of Norwich Conn has been in the habit of sending these caught by him to his friends in different States, through Messrs B P Kidder & Co Yesterday that firm received a letter from Mr Samuel Walker, of Richmond Ind acknowledging the receipt of one sent him as follows "The representative from Maine arrived in excellent condition He is on exhibition to-day and seems to be as popular with the Hoosiers as Maine's 'Favorite Son' We will test the qualities of the gentleman to-morrow Fish sent from here arrive in perfect order in any part of the United States

A BEAUTIFUL BANNER. A fine new banner for Bangor Canton Patriarchs Militant, arrived in this city yesterday and it is on exhibition in the windows of the store of Mr James A Robinson who furnished it, it being made by M C Lilley & Co, of Columbus Ohio The price was $150 and it is a splendid piece of work A globe and a crown surmount the staff and the banner, which is of silk, is white upon its front and red upon its back Upon the front which is handsomely trimmed with fringe tassels and gold braid is a shield bearing the inscription "Grand Canton Bangor, No 3, 'Pax Aut Bellum' Mustered June 20th 1885 Bangor Maine I O O F, P M" Upon the back is a shield bearing the words Justitia Universalis The whole is a beautiful work of art and will make a most attractive sight when borne in procession It will be first unfurled to the breeze on June 20 when the Patriarchs will visit Dover

AN ENJOYABLE OCCASION Our Brewer correspondent writes Upon invitation of Mr and Mrs E E Hussey, the members of the Y P. S C E, connected with the M E Church, Brewer, held their regular monthly sociable, at their residence on Holyoke street last Thursday evening The regular monthly business of the society was held in the earlier part of the evening and was followed by a short but very enjoyable entertainment The following was the programme Instrumental selection, "Home, Sweet Home," Miss Elvie Burrill, reading, "The Modern Lochinvar," Miss Bunker, solo, "Birdie," Miss Maud Kenney, instrumental duet, Misses Lettie and Maggie Sparks, reading, "The House Top Saint," Miss Moor, song, "The Old Red Cradle," quartette. Each selection was well rendered and well received After the entertainment, all enjoyed themselves socially and by partaking of bountiful refreshment, furnished by the generous host and hostess, during the remainder of the evening. It being the first time that many had had the opportunity of calling since Mr. and Mrs Hussey moved into their new house, those present very much enjoyed being shown about and admiring the convenience of arrangement, beauty of finish and furnishings and coziness of their home. At the business meeting a vote of thanks was extended to Mr. and Mrs Hussey for their kind invitation and generous hospitality, also a committee was appointed to make arrangements for a moon light excursion to "Squaw Point some time this month. At quite a late hour the company departed feeling that the evening had been spent most enjoyably.

AMUSEMENTS

"A Night Off."

The repetition of the very amusing comedy "A Night Off" by the Rehan Company last evening was a great success, and it was a thoroughly enjoyable and entertaining performance, and it was a continuous flow of mirth from beginning to end. The largest audience of the three nights was in attendance, it being composed of some of our most prominent people, and it was noticeable that among those present were many that had attended the two previous entertainments The highest praise for the play and the splendid company which presented it, would be no exaggeration of the merits of both, and when the company again makes its appearance in this city it will be sure of a hearty welcome which have been effected by Hood's Sarsaparilla are sufficient proof that this medicine does possess peculiar curative power In the severest cases of scrofula or salt rheum, when other preparations had been powerless, the use of Hood's Sarsaparilla has brought about the happiest results The case of Miss Sarah C. Whittier of Lowell, Mass. who suffered terribly from scrofula sores, that of Charles A. Roberts of East Wilson, N Y, who had thirteen abscesses on his face and neck, that of Willie Duff, of Walpole, Mass, who had hip disease and scrofula so bad that physicians said he could not recover, are a few of the many instances in which wonderful cures were effected by this medicine.

THE REMARKABLE CURES

Van Deckermann's Bargain.

By M. THEED.

I stood for a moment in an utter hopeless bewilderment, and then I burst into a laugh, which sounded even to myself forced and unnatural.

"Pshaw!" I exclaimed, "I must have been dreaming."

The words had scarcely passed my lips when something the like of which I had never heard before—something between a laugh and a wail—an indescribable mingling of pain and mockery—sounded close at my elbow. Turning sharp round to see whence it came, I lost my balance and fell face forward on the bed, dragging the sheet, at which I clutched to save myself, to the ground. As I did so, something fell on the floor with a thud. It was my watch, which failing its accustomed receptacle, I had stowed away under my pillow, but of this I did not satisfy myself until the morning, when, upon finding and picking it up I discovered that it had stopped at a quarter to 4 o'clock. Of the rest of that night I have no remembrance, save a confused one of scrambling into bed with, I think, the most fervent prayer to be delivered from evil I had ever uttered on my lips.

"And you expect me to believe that you were in your sober senses when you saw, or imagined you saw, this—what shall I call it?—double of myself?" said Mr. Van Deckermann when I had related as briefly as I could my experience of the night before.

"I have told you already, sir, that I was wide awake. Put it to yourself whether I should be likely to be such a fool as to let anything which I could possibly account for to myself as a bad dream or a mere optical delusion stand in the way of my acceptance of so substantial a benefit as that you offer me! I could no more subject my wife"—

"Pshaw!" he broke in, scornfully; "don't talk about your wife. Be honest and say frankly that you are not prepared to face it yourself."

"I had said as much already, Mr. Van Deckermann. Nothing would induce me, after what I went through last night, to become your tenant."

"And yet you don't believe in the supernatural!"

"I did not," I replied. "I should have said 'no' to anybody who might have put the question to me yesterday in all good faith. To-day I should decline to answer it, I don't know what to believe."

The old man puckered up his brows and regarded me thoughtfully.

"Well, it is your own look out," he said. "I suppose I was mistaken in my man. It would have been better for both of us if your nerves had been stronger. I told you last night I had been too candid with you. I should have hit upon some other expedient, but I was over scrupulous. It is my own fault and I must pay the penalty of it in my disappointment. I am sorry for your wife, you must explain matters to her in your own way. Between you and me there need be no more said about it. You will find your room here ready for the night, and the longer you can stay the better."

He shook me warmly by the hand as he spoke.

"Believe me," I began, "I shall never forget"——

"Not a word about it," he said, "as you value my friendship. The time may come when I shall myself reopen the subject, though I think not—I think not. Until then let it, I beg of you, drop."

I am afraid I took to my work that day a very divided attention. I did not regret my candor, though there were moments—when I was discussing my mutton chop, for example, in my own special snug corner, not unaccompanied by a good tankard of stout—in which I felt more courageous, if not more skeptical. Granted the existence of a ghostly visitant, might one not in time become accustomed to it? What positive harm could anything of the kind do one? But across even these faint efforts at reasoning came the vision of the wife and children scared into sickness or something worse, and I felt that, in any case, I had acted for the best.

I found my host even more cheerful and loquacious than was his wont that evening. He ordered the old Dutchman, who combined with other duties those of butler, to bring up some champagne and tossed it off, while he hospitably pressed it upon me, with a freedom which surprised me. It was this, I imagined, which led him to talk, in a bragging and boastful tone not habitual to him, of the wealth which had rewarded the labor of his earlier years, and of sundry past achievements of industry and application of which he had never before made mention. The more he drank the faster he talked, and I was not surprised when his self laudation took another and more offensive form, and he began to enlarge upon his own strength of mind and purpose as opposed to the weakness and mental deficiency of those with whom he came in contact. It would have been the easiest thing in the world to pick a quarrel with him, but I was sincerely grateful to him for one thing, and for another I was satisfied he had taken more than was good for him. I was not sorry, however, when as 10 o'clock struck—the solitary game of cribbage, for which the long monologue to which he had treated me had left time, coming to an end simultaneously—he suggested that I should retire early and make a long night of it.

"You look as if you had not slept for a week," he added complimentarily, "and my pipe is good enough company for me—better than most. You'll find everything ready for you upstairs."

I heard and obeyed, and that night I slept like a top, so soundly, indeed, that when the old servant came to call me in the morning I was only awakened to the fact of his presence by an agitated appeal to me to arouse myself. The scared expression of the man's face, and the concern and trepidation to which it bore evidence, effectually recalled my scattered senses, and I sprang up in bed eagerly demanding what was amiss.

"The master," he gasped out, "what has come to the master! He is not in his room—he has not slept in it. He is nowhere in the house—nowhere about the place. What can have come to him?"

His wife was close at his heels, echoing the inquiry with a look in her face not less anxious and perturbed than his own, but in which there mingled a strange suspiciousness, which even in the shock of the announcement which had just been made to me I could not but mark and resent. "How in heaven's name should I know?" I demanded angrily. "How long is it since you missed him, and where have you looked for him? He was having a pipe in the dining room when I came up last night. You must have seen him later than that. He went round with you last thing, I suppose, as he did the night before—as I understand him he always did?"

"Not always. If he gets any sleep in the day time worth speaking of, he won't go up at his usual time. He'll go round by himself then later on, but I do my duty by the house and by him just the same. I did it last night. I saw to the doors and shutters as usual, and I put up the chain and bolted and barred the hall door—I could not have slept in my bed else—and this morning I found the chain down and the bolts drawn. Lisa here would have had me go straight to the police to set them to find him, but I thought there might have been something in his talk last night might put us on the track. I've been with him these forty years and I've never seen him as I saw him last night. He is not used to strangers, and he's too old to change his ways. He was wandering about yesterday, and talking to himself—Lisa heard him, and if any harm has come to him its the worry and excitement will have done it," the old man wound up violently.

"Before I went to the police, I would send to your master's other house," I said quietly. There had come back upon my mind as I listened to him very vividly the half veiled taunts and jeers to which I had been subjected the night before, and, with the recollection of them, there flashed upon it the possibility that, wrathful and disappointed at my failure, he had resolved to face the mystery, whatever it might be, himself. I was not prepared, however, for the effect of the suggestion upon the old couple. They stood, as it were, transfixed, exchanging a look full of terror and apprehension.

"The other house!" they murmured. "Gone to the other house!"

The woman was the first to recover herself. "I don't believe you, master! You're trying to frighten us. Don't listen to him, Jan. He knows better than that Mynheer Andrew has gone there, and so do we."

"It is there I shall go to look for him, at any rate," I replied. "As to you, you can please yourselves, so long as you leave me to turn out and get into my clothes."

I made no long business of my toilet, being, as may be supposed, anything but easy, or happy, in my mind. Rather to my surprise, after the tone she had adopted to me upstairs, I found Lisa waiting below to insist upon my swallowing some hot coffee before I left the house, and to tell me that Jan had preceded me to the Cedars.

"I was hasty just now," she said, "and I ask your pardon, but I would sooner have found the master dead in his bed than that he should be where you say he is. Better dead in his right mind—a thousand times better—than alive with us here, out of it; and out of it he will have been before ever he went to the old house. You don't know—there's nobody knows but us three—there are those that have seen, but they don't understand. I tell you I would sooner I never saw him again—though God knows how it would be with us without him—than that he should be found so."

It was with this comforting assurance that I set forth. There was no time for thought; what was required of me was action, and I did not let the grass grow under my feet. I met the old Dutchman just outside the gate at the Cedars. Nothing had been seen or heard of Mr. Van Deckermann there. He had been satisfied it would be so, but as for me—

"I am not satisfied yet," I said. "I shall not be satisfied until I have been over the house. You can come back with me or not, as you like."

He did come back with me, though that he thought me headstrong, if not more, and that his opinion was shared by the Minchins, was evident enough. What strange intuition possessed me I do not know, but what had been at first no more than an idea had grown into a conviction. I felt sure I should find my host in the room I had myself occupied the previous night. In vain did they try to persuade me that even had Mr. Van Deckermann been insane enough to let himself into the house at midnight in midwinter, his entry could not have been made without arousing them. I was bent upon taking my own way, and they had no alternative but to follow me.

At the door of the room I paused and listened. I could hear nothing, and I was about to open it—when, as I laid my hand upon it, I was arrested by the sound of a low, prolonged laugh proceeding from within. It was succeeded by a sharp cry behind me, and an exclamation in his native tongue, full of piteousness and horror, from Jan. If he could, the poor old fellow would have held me back, but I had not persisted so far to shrink from what lay before me at last, and I turned the handle without more ado and went in.

The arrangement of the furniture had been undisturbed since my brief occupation of the room—with one exception; the old arm chair lay literally upon its back, its dingy damask covering hanging about it in rags and tatters, while at a little distance from it, seated on the ground, smoothing out some crumpled pieces of paper, and chattering and chuckling to himself as he did so, in a manner that made my blood creep as I listened to him, was the object of my search. He looked up as we went in, but he did not cease from his occupation, and for some seconds the silence was unbroken, save by himself. My companions stood huddled together at the door, too much appalled to speak, and I was myself in little better case. By way of attracting his attention I drew the curtain from across the further window and let the light fall in upon him. He blinked and shifted his seat somewhat, as if to escape it, but he took no further notice. "Mr. Van Deckermann," I said. "Don't you know it is past breakfast time and you are keeping me waiting?"

But the words conveyed no meaning to him, no more meaning to him than his own wordless, incoherent jabbering did to us.

"It is no good, master," Jan said in a broken voice. "He'll have nothing more to say to any one in this world. He has come at the truth after all these years, and he has got his death blow with it. Where did he find them, think you?"

He had dropped on his knees by the side of his master, and he now held up for my inspection what I now perceived to be a bank note. Van Deckermann still engaged in his monotonous occupation of smoothing out and fondling its fellows, took no notice of the action. The note was yellow with age, and involuntarily, as the strange experiences of the night I had myself spent in the room recurred to my mind, I turned my attention upon the chair which had met with such ungentle usage.

He had dropped on his knees by the side of his master

It was even more mutilated than it appeared at first sight. The double webbing, of which the seat was composed, having been partly hacked with a pen knife, partly torn apart, nor had the rifling of this strange repository been so complete as to leave any doubt as to the purpose to which it had been turned.

As I turned away from it, sickened at a discovery which showed me only too plainly, the connection between my own narrative to the unhappy being before me and the fate which had overtaken him, the woman, Minchin broke into tears and lamentations.

"If I had only left it where it was! If I had let things take their chance! If I had only seen the end of it!"

It was not without considerable difficulty we got my poor friend home, and the verdict pronounced upon him by the medical men, whom we lost no time in calling in, was not more favorable than I anticipated. His reason had sustained what they had little doubt would prove to be a fatal shock, and the sudden violent derangement of the nervous system threatened his life. The genuine pity and distress of the old servants spoke well for them and for their master, and while he lay, as he did lie, for many days between life and death, there sprang up between them and myself a certain mutual respect and confidence.

It was from Lisa I heard as much as there was to tell in the way of explanation of what I had myself seen, and of the catastrophe which had befallen Van Deckermann.

According to her, he had been confronted, as I had been the previous night, by the apparition of his father, and had arrived thus at last in his own proper person at the secret, the elucidation of which had been for years the object nearest to his heart.

It appeared that in telling us—my wife and myself—the story of his early life, he had stopped short at what was at once the saddest and the most striking part of it. It was not so much in the bare fact of his cousin's death, but in the terrible circumstances accompanying it, there had lain the overpowering anguish of which we had been permitted a glimpse. Old Van Deckermann, growing more and more miserly and suspicious of all around him as the years went on, had at last, after emptying the house of every servant it contained by a succession of similar charges, accused his niece of the theft of a large sum of money, and had positively gone the length, in what would appear to have been an access of insanity, of giving her into custody. The evidence was insufficient, but the disappearance of the money was proved beyond a doubt, and the fact that she had only the day before her arrest posted a letter to Andrew Van Deckermann at the Cape seemed to give a certain coloring to the theory advanced by his father that the robbery had been committed on his behalf. Had the truth as to the young man's position been known, it must have been seen at once how untenable was the argument, but his cousin in her strangely isolated life had made no confidences, and the poor thing had not the strength of mind to wait for that redress of wrong which time must inevitably have brought her. Whether open or closed to her, within her uncle's doors it was impossible that she should enter again, and she found a refuge from her unmerited shame and sorrow where so many had found it before her, and have found it since—in the river!

The old man never recovered the shock of her death, though he persisted to the end in his belief in her guilt, and he died miserably only two days before his son's return. For a long time past he had become strange in his ways, and had turned night into day, wandering about the house at all hours, so that it was scarcely surprising that, left to itself as it was after his death, the place should have come by the uncanny reputation of which its master had spoken.

Of one thing I was left in no doubt, although I never had it from his own lips, and that was the superstitious horror with which its owner himself regarded the house; but that horror was dominated, as the event proved, by a still stronger influence. That his father's uneasy spirit haunted the scene of his cruelty and injustice he was fully persuaded, and he had confided to Lisa more than once his further conviction that by some means yet—natural or supernatural—the charge brought against the poor creature who had fallen a victim to it would be cleared up. He had employed me as his tool, and, hopeless of my following up the clew I had found, had worked himself up to the required pitch and gone, heaven only knows in what state of mind, to surely as strange encounter as ever man contemplated.

What he saw can only be matter of surmise; he lived for a year or more, all faculties restored to him, but minus memory and quite tractable and gentle. My own belief is that the missing notes, hiding place of which I have no moral doubt, was discovered to him that night, must have been secreted there by the older Van Deckermann himself, under the influence of somnambulism, though that he was a somnambulist I have no evidence to show. All I know is that the face I saw was the face of c[illegible]

At Mr. Van Deckermann's death it was found that by a will, made some months before his fatal visit to it, he had bequeathed the Cedars, with other more desirable property, to me. To the best of my belief, a supernatural history had come to an end with the catastrophe of which this is the record, but the terms on which it was left to me were happily unconditional, and a terrace of new houses, given up to the most prosaic associations, occupies the site of it.
